

Geoffrey of Monmouth in 910 BC. This prince 2) ..... (to educate) in the learned city of Athens, but being afflicted with leprosy, he 3) ..... (to exile) from his country, and 4) (to become) a swineherd. His pigs too 5) ..... (to catch) the disease, but by rolling in the black, steaming mud, where the hot Springs now boil up, they 6) ..... (to become) healed. The prince 7) (to follow) their example, and thus 8) ..... (to cure) of his malady. In gratitude for his deliverance he 9) ..... (to found) the city of Bath, then 10) ..... (to call) Kaerbadus, "and 11) (to make) hot baths in it for the benefit of the public, which he 12) ..... (to dedicate) to the goddess Minerva; in whose temple he 13) ..... (to keep) fires that never 14) ..... (to go out), nor 15) ..... (to consume) to ashes, but as soon as they 16) ..... (to begin) to decay 17) ..... (to turn into) balls of stone. About this time the prophet Elias 18) ..... (to pray) that it might not rain upon earth, and it 19) ..... (not to rain) for three years and six months. The prince 20) ..... (to be) a very ingenious man, and 21) ..... (to teach) necromancy in his kingdom, nor did he leave off pursuing his magical operations, till he 22) ..... (to attempt) to fly to the upper region of the air with wings which he had prepared, and 23) ..... (to fall down upon) the temple of Apollo in the city of Trinovantum (London), where he 24) ..... (to dash) to pieces."

From P.H. Ditchfield's The Story of Our English Towns